

The bike which has stood the test of time from the early 1900s—the Royal Enfield still produces marvellous beasts admired by those with the thirst for "power". All cities have their own bullet clubs, and now it's Calcutta's turn. Indrajeet Sen, a Class XII student of Calcutta International School, has started the only such club in eastern India – Eastern Bulls. It currently has 28 members of which 4 are from Calcutta.

The club has experienced riders as well as novices. Long rides away from the bustle are much awaited events for the mixed bag of members ranging from software engineers to students. It also plans rides for social causes. Indrajeet recently went on an all-India ride organised by a similar club in Delhi.

The only conditions for membership are possession of a Bullet and passion for riding. The club has a set of riding rules (that will soon be on the site <http://groups.yahoo.com/group/easternbulls>) that are to follow. The members meet on a weekly basis to discuss technicalities of the bike and share experiences. Workshops to troubleshoot will also be organised. So, bullet junkies, rev up or eat dust.
